“The west coast of Tierra del Fuego crumbles into many islands, and mysterious channels snake between them and get lost at the end of the world, the Devil’s Tomb. Sailors from all latitudes say that there, one mile from the tragic promontory that oversees the constant duel of the two largest oceans on Earth, on Cape Horn, they hear creaking sounds as the Devil drags several tons of chains along the bottom of the sea during stormy, horrendous nights, when the waters cast dark shadows that appear to rise and fall from the heavens to those depths.”
